Corporate social responsibility is a core Caradonna value. To ensure a bright future for our ocean we partner with Sea Save Foundation (SeaSave.org), which participates in international decision-making through onsite involvement at CITES, the United Nations Ocean Conference and other global conservation initiatives. We believe that an informed public makes smarter decisions, we work to promote international treaties for the protection of the oceans, and we leverage creative campaigns to spark discussions on important issues.

WHY DO WE DIVE?

Is it for the sheer thrill of being able to breathe underwater? Is it because it gives us the ability to be a part of another world? Is it the feeling of slow-motion flying that is otherwise unattainable? We think most divers will agree: diving offers us the opportunity to expand our horizons far beyond that of our fellow land-based human beings. Remember the first time a school of fish enveloped you. Imagine the first time you encountered a shark and realized that it is not the man-eater the media has made it. Picture the first time you peered out over a drop-off into the unending blue. It's life-changing. As we enter 2018, we are still struggling to bring awareness to those who would exploit the oceans of the world rather than protect them. Thankfully, progress is being made on many fronts, and more measures are being taken to preserve the massive ecosystem that covers over two-thirds of our planet. The real question is... will it be too little and too late? We hope not. As divers, we have a unique opportunity to bring awareness to these critical causes, and one of the ways we do this is by traveling to some of the world's most compelling dive destinations. There we witness first-hand the trials and tribulations as well as the success stories of marine conservation efforts. It can light a fire in us that can be spread to others and impact the future of the sport—and our planet—in a positive way. To put it in today's terms, dive travel needs to go viral! So keep traveling to explore our underwater world, and take as many of those land-locked friends with you to discover, fall in love with, and save the big blue.

ARUBA

Aruba's clear waters are filled with reefs and shipwrecks that offer enough variety to keep divers busy from morning to night dive. Sites range from snorkel-friendly shallows to critter-rich slopes and deep drops that edge into extended range territory. The island's signature wreck, the SS Antilla, is an adventure for everyone, as this large and historic vessel lies in relatively shallow water close to a sheltering shore, with sections rising high enough to be enjoyed by snorkelers. Reefs are equally easy to reach, with many just a short boat ride away from island dive centers, and more than a dozen accessible directly from shore. Aruba is one of the Caribbean's most cosmopolitan destinations, with upscale resorts, fine dining, casinos, and a lively nightlife scene. But it also has a wilder side best explored by jeep or four-wheeler safaris.

BARBADOS

Diving in Barbados couldn't be easier. The waters are calm, the boat rides relaxing, and a bounty of wrecks and reefs await discovery at moderate depths. But don't equate easy with boring, as an abundance of marine life and a diverse underwater landscape provides ample variety. Carlisle Bay's collection of diver-friendly ships are often visited by turtles and rays, while the 365-foot-long Stavronikita is one of the largest shipwrecks in the Caribbean. Those seeking adventure can delve a bit deeper at sites such as Shark Bank, or venture to the eastern shore when conditions allow you to discover a slightly wilder side to this decidedly civilized island. Known as the friendliest folk in the Caribbean, Barbadians, aka Bajans, offer a gregarious welcome to one and all to an island that still serves High English Tea mid afternoon, then pulses to African roots at night.

All dive sites are complemented by a profusion of beautiful Caribbean reef and pelagic fish, meaning that your dive is sure to be an enthralling experience that you'll never forget!

BONAIRE

Protected, sheltered, diverse and accessible. These are the qualities that draw divers back to Bonaire time and again. The entire shoreline is surrounded by a no-touch, no-take marine park that safeguards some of the healthiest and most colorful reefs in the Caribbean. And the diving couldn't be easier. The island's western shore is sheltered from prevailing wind and waves, creating calm conditions for both shore and boat diving. Because reefs begin just yards from the beach, and in sheltered water, access is easy. Divers can drive rental vehicles directly to well-marked dive sites along the coastal road and wade right in, or enjoy a relaxing boat ride along the coast. Ashore, the vibe is low key and the focus is on outdoor recreation and natural attractions. Adventures include windsurfing, mangrove tours, mountain biking, hiking and day trips to remote, surf-washed coves.

BRITISH VIRGIN ISLANDS

The sailing capital of the Caribbean is also a prime destination for divers. Below the island's green hills lie volcanic slopes encrusted in hard corals and festooned with undulating groves of colorful sea fans and sponges, all enjoying the protection of a nation-wide marine park. Currents are mild, fish life is abundant and the logistics are easy. Laid-back beach resorts launch daily trips to local reefs, along with regular visits to one of the Caribbean's most historic shipwrecks, and excursions to the underwater art gallery on the Kodiak Queen. Slopes reward multi-level profiles, and allow novices and experienced divers to enjoy the same sites at different depths. A liveaboard option combines sailing and diving on an island-hopping itinerary. Surface intervals are livened up by iconic beach bars that encourage a barefoot and fancy-free attitude.

CURAÇAO

For a preview of Curaçao's reefs, simply stroll through the historic district of Willemstad, where colonial-era buildings display cheerful shades of orange, yellow and red. These same colors are mirrored in the prolific groves of soft corals and sponges that cover the island's underwater plateaus and submerged slopes. Divers have a range of underwater adventures to choose from, whether making a shore dive on memorable sites such as Porto Marie or Alice in Wonderland, riding the currents at Watamula or crossing to the deserted island of Klein Curaçao to discover pristine reefs. Not to be missed are the iconic coral formations of Mushroom Forest, or a snorkel trip into the shadows of the Blue Room grotto. Director's Bay holds cryptic prizes such as seahorses, frogfish and flamingo tongues, while Diver's Lead delivers wall-diving drama.

DOMINICA

Known as the nature island, Dominica is a land of rugged beauty. Ditto for what lies below, where the island's soaring peaks, steep cliffs and deep valleys become dramatic underwater drop offs, sheer walls and submarine canyons. Dominica's volcanic origins are evident in a seascape riddled with pinnacles, swim-throughs and bubbling fumaroles, while the nation's commitment to conservation is evident in the wealth of marine life and the healthy hard and soft corals that thrive within a trio of marine reserves. Small treasures from seahorses, cleaner shrimp, arrow crabs and frogfish to a plethora of invertebrates await the keen-eyed diver and the avid macro photographer. Calm waters on the island's sheltered western shore create comfortable and inviting conditions for all, but excitement is never far away, and can be found on sites where converging Atlantic and Caribbean waters nurture vast schools of jacks, snapper and Creole wrasse.

GUADELOUPE ISLANDS

Many destinations claim to be a favorite of dive pioneer Jacques Cousteau, but it was the waters of Guadeloupe where he chose to create his first landmark film, The Silent World. The Caribbean reefs and fish life he immortalized now lie within a namesake marine reserve that includes some of the region's most popular dive sites. But that's just the start. In addition to coral gardens at diver-friendly depths, the waters of the Guadeloupe archipelago include a diverse range of underwater landscapes that takes in shipwrecks, arches and swim-throughs, submarine canyons and a dramatic offshore pinnacle. Complementing these underwater experiences are islands that combine natural beauty with French charm. Visitors can hike a volcanic peak, stroll a colorful village market, and indulge in a gourmet dinner on a waterfront terrace.

PUERTO RICO

Sitting on the boundary of the Caribbean and Tropical Atlantic, Puerto Rico is an island of contrasts, both above and below the water. The south coast's mountains are mirrored under the water by steep offshore slopes and walls ideal for multi-level profiles. The east coast enters the ocean more gradually, with miles of intricate coral formations in shallow to medium depths. A boat ride away are the picturesque out islands of Culebra and Vieques, which are home to some of the region's best coral reefs and clearest waters. On the island's southwestern corner, the Parguera Wall drops to depths of 1,500 feet, and after dark the waters of nearby Bio Bay light up in eerie glowing blues. After the dive, an exciting range of eco adventures await in the mountains, while San Juan offers both cosmopolitan excitement and the charms of a 500-year-old Colonial city.

SABA • STATIA • ST. KITTS & NEVIS

At the northern end of the Leeward Islands, a group of less-visited destinations reward divers with a varied array of underwater adventures. The adjacent pairing of St. Kitts and Nevis islands creates an underwater landscape that includes an expansive mid-water shoal, along with wrecks, near-shore slopes, and walls cut with canyons and arches. Statia combines colorful reefs and modern shipwrecks with the historic remains of Colonial-era sailing ships. As a bonus, invertebrate enthusiasts and macro photographers will discover sections of seafloors alive with a wealth of subjects. Saba delivers a surreal underwater landscape of submerged volcanic spires and seamounts that attract swirling schools of fish. The islands themselves are equally diverse and interesting, providing visitors with mountain slopes to climb, historic sites to discover and picturesque harbor towns where Caribbean traditions live on.

WRECKS TO dive FOR

Wreck your next dive with the coral-covered 'Wreck of the River Taw', just one of many still being discovered around St. Kitts and Nevis. Hang out in coral gardens with the locals—leatherback turtles and spotted moray eels—or heat things up at 'the Vents', where coral tubes spout hot water. The best part? ST. LUCIA

One of the Caribbean's most scenic islands is equally stunning below the water. The sloping reefs that run close to St. Lucia's calm western coast are covered in bright-hued carpets of gorgonians, black coral trees, sponges and lace coral. Dramatic seamounts rise from deep water to within a few feet of the surface. More than 150 species of fish thrive on the protected reefs of a marine preserve, delighting photographers with subjects such as golden spotted eels, seahorses, frogfish, turtles and a wealth of colorful invertebrates. Shipwrecks wear an over coat of marine life that transforms steel into an oasis of life. A reef that emits champagne-like bubbles, bioluminescent sea life and a mysterious serpentine creature known as "The Thing" all add to the allure of the underwater realm. Above the water, beaches, forests and mountains become a playground for active adventure, or a backdrop for relaxation.

TURKS & CAICOS

Clear waters, vibrant reefs and big walls. This promise becomes reality in the islands of the Turk & Caicos, where undersea plateaus riddled with swim-throughs, caverns and canyons lead to coral-dense cliff faces that drop abruptly from the shallows to depths of a mile or more. This is the land of the multi-level profile, where dives can begin with a descent on a wall covered in huge elephant ear sponges, and end more than an hour later in the sunlight shallows. To sweeten the experience, add in consistently stellar water clarity, a smattering of historic and modern wrecks, and thousands of acres of fish-laden coral heads and shallow reefs that see little diver traffic. Beachfront resorts on the island of Providenciales offer a full range of perks and indulgences; liveaboards cruise to remote and pristine reefs; and Grand Turk provides a step back in time.

COZUMEL

Cozumel brings together all the elements of a perfect dive vacation. The western shores of this small Caribbean island are sheltered from prevailing winds and waves, and washed by currents that bring warm, clear waters. This life-giving flow nurtures luxuriant growths of brightly-hued sponges and soft corals that overgrow hard-coral ledges, ridges and drop offs. A menagerie of fish and invertebrates thrive on these reefs, and are under the protection of a marine park. The currents also propel divers on exhilarating but controlled drifts as they go with the flow. Adding to the appeal are direct flights from the US, a wide range of beachfront hotels to enjoy, and dive boats that make easy runs in calm waters to sites less than a mile from shore. RIVIERA MAYA

In addition to coastal coral reefs and miles of magnificent beaches, Mexico's Riviera Maya offers a number of unique underwater adventures. To the north, boats depart from Isla Mujeres for open-water swims with whale sharks and dives beneath swirling schools of baitfish corralled by sailfish. Big thrills continue when female bull sharks congregate off Playa del Carmen each winter. Quieter but no less thrilling adventures await those who immerse in the clear fresh waters of the cenote caverns that riddle the jungle landscape. Also in the diving mix are easy boat rides to spur-and-groove reef formations visited by turtles and tarpon, visits to fish-laden shipwrecks near Cancun, tours of the world's largest underwater sculpture garden and day trips to the world-famous reefs of Cozumel. Ashore there are ancient Mayan cities to explore and all the topside attractions of a world-class vacation destination.

BAY ISLANDS OF HONDURAS

The Bay Islands—Roatan, Utila and Guanaja— serve up a quintessential mix of Caribbean dive experiences. There are sheltered lagoons where divers can spend relaxing hours searching for cryptic marine life among the seagrasses and coral heads. Coastlines are buttressed by hard corals slopes riddled with clefts and crevices that harbor a colorful collection of reef fish and invertebrates. Sponge-covered walls plunge into the depths, while nearby seamounts attract passing pelagic fish. There are wreck dives, drift dives, night dives, shark dives and, for the lucky, an encounter with the biggest fish in the sea—the whale shark. Each of the three primary islands of the group have well-developed diving infrastructure, but distinctly different personalities. This allows divers to choose between the luxuries of a first-class resort or the camaraderie of a laid-back dive lodge.

BELIZE

Belize rewards divers with an abundance of underwater environments ripe for discovery and rich in fish life. Lying just inside the world's second-longest barrier reef is a string of small coastal islands known as cayes. Here, beaches open to critter-rich seagrass beds and coral heads, and it is just a short boat ride to the dramatic spur-and-groove formations of the outer reef. Also nearby are encounters with sharks and rays at the Hol Chan Marine Reserve. Farther offshore, a trio of atolls adds steep walls, schooling fish and the mysterious depths of the famous Blue Hole. On southern reefs, seasonal fish spawns draw massive whale sharks. Expansive shallows between cayes and the mainland serve as an aquatic playground for kayakers, fishermen and sailors, while the rainforests and mountains of the interior offer Mayan ruins, jungle river drifts, cave tours, off-roading, hiking and more.

COSTA RICA

The emerald waters of Costa Rica's Gulf of Papagayo are a fish watcher's delight. From flights of mantas and mobula rays to funnel clouds of jacks and snapper, the ocean teems with life. And the same submerged pinnacles that attract pelagics also hide a wealth of small treasures such as seahorses and Harlequin clown shrimp. The Catalina and Bat islands offers sea turtle encounters, fly-bys from numerous species of rays, massive shoals of fish and chances for shark sightings. More adventure awaits offshore on Cocos Island, where schooling hammerheads take center stage, with sea lions, mantas, turtles, whale sharks and dolphins adding to the show. Ashore, the Guanacaste region is the starting point for a wide range of eco adventures that takes in everything from volcano hikes and rainforest zip-line tours to whitewater rafting excursions and soaks in natural mineral hot springs.

AUSTRALIA

There are reefs and there is THE REEF. Australia's Great Barrier Reef remains at the top of many a diver's bucket list, and with good reason. Named as one of the seven wonders of the natural world, it is the largest coral community on the planet, and one of ocean's most biologically diverse habitats. It's all here, from the tiny and the exotic to the largest fish in the sea. Explorations of the reef can begin at land-based resorts in Cairns or on Heron Island, taking in a range of sites that feature wall dives, swim-throughs, expansive fields of hard corals and the dramatic formations known as bommies. Liveboards give access to an even greater range of underwater adventures, including the renowned sites of the Ribbon Reefs and the Coral Sea. Ashore, all the natural and cultural discoveries of the Land Down Under await.

FIJI

Fiji is known as the Soft Coral Capital of the World, and a dive on aptly named Rainbow Reef is all that is needed to confirm this title. Here the currents nurture dense growths of alcyonaria soft corals, creating an undulating tapestry of life in colors ranging from ice blue and purple to yellow, pink and red. These waters are not only colorful, but also rich in marine life. Fijian waters support more than 1,500 species of fish, several thousand varieties of unique invertebrates and 400 types of coral. Divers and snorkelers will discover an intriguing and diverse underwater environment that delivers everything from critter-rich bays and sun-dappled shallow reefs to precipitous walls, fish-laden pinnacles, shark-filled lagoons, shadowed grottoes and current-swept channels. GALAPAGOS

The islands that inspired Darwin now beckon divers with a menagerie of big animal thrills. Sitting at the crossroads of the Equatorial Counter Current and the colder Humboldt Current, the Galapagos Islands are washed by nutrient-rich waters that harbor massive shoals of fish, and attract whales, sharks, dolphins, manta rays, sea lions and other apex predators to feast on the bounty. This is one of the only known places on the planet where hammerhead sharks school in great numbers. Against a seascape of dramatic volcanic formations, curious fur seals swoop in for a closer look at divers, while penguins and marine iguanas free dive the shallows in search of a meal. Liveaboard vessels give access to unique sites that spread across a 50,000-acre marine preserve, but no visit to the Galapagos is complete without a land tour to witness the birthplace of the theory of evolution.

MICRONESIA

In the heart of the Western Pacific Ocean, a trio of destinations deliver some of the most storied underwater adventures on the planet. Yap's international claim to fame are the giant manta rays that appear at cleaning stations with near clockwork precision. Equally thrilling are the gatherings of gray, black and white tip reef sharks on offshore reefs. The floor of Chuuk Lagoon is strewn with a sunken Japanese fleet now shrouded in thick growths of coral, often sitting upright with cargo holds filled with relics of a time past. Palau delivers a smorgasbord of underwater adventures, from the swirling sea life drawn by the currents at Blue Corner to the shadowed chambers of Chandelier Cave and the unique freshwater residents of Jellyfish Lake. Surface intervals provide a chance to visit traditional villages or explore abandoned WWII fortifications cloaked in jungle foliage.

SOLOMON ISLANDS

This is one of the Pacific's best-kept diving secrets. The Solomon Islands combine the marine life diversity of the Indo-Pacific with a dramatic range of underwater landscapes, and an extensive collection of historic war wrecks. Shallow reefs are covered in a variety of both hard and soft corals in almost every hue, and support parades of ornately colored reef fish and menageries of nudibranchs, shrimps and crabs. Other sites feature long lava tubes, caverns, walls and current-washed pinnacles where divers are immersed in a passing parade of sharks, big schools of tuna, trevally, barracuda and bumphead parrotfish. These islands saw ferocious fighting during World War II, and the Battle of Guadalcanal created Iron Bottom Sound. Here, an undersea graveyard for some 200 ships, 690 aircraft and several thousand smaller vessels has become a wreck diving mecca.

THE ISLANDS OF TAHITI

If you like sharks, the Islands of Tahiti are for you. In the waters surrounding Tahiti and other members of the island group, shark encounters are common, but not threatening. Whitetips and blacktips are often joined by lemon sharks on coral heads within lagoons, while channels leading to the open ocean draw swarms of gray reefs, silky, bulls, hammerheads, silver tips and more. These same spectacularly clear waters offer more big animal thrills, including sightings of manta rays, dolphins, sea turtles and swirling schools of jacks, tuna and barracuda. Divers less interested in the ocean's apex predators will also find sheltered coral gardens within the lagoons, where rays and reef fish are the norm. As a bonus, all of these experiences take place on some of the most scenic islands in the world.

INDONESIA

The waters of Indonesia are at the epicenter of marine biodiversity, and the numbers are impressive: 13,000 islands stretch across a 3,000-mile swath of ocean, with thousands of square miles of coral reefs that are home to more than 3,000-plus species of fish, 500 varieties of hard and soft coral and thousands of enigmatic invertebrates. From the weird and wonderful critters in Lembeh Strait to the graceful mantas and coral spires of Komodo, the rich coral gardens of Raja Ampat and the dramatic walls and reefs of Wakatobi, the diving in Indonesia is some of the best in the world. Few places on the planet are as varied, and as packed with interesting and unusual marine life. Fish watchers and photographers can fill logbooks and image cards with encounters with the likes of wunderpus, mimic octopus, flamboyant cuttlefish, mating mandarinfish, pygmy seahorses, harlequin shrimp and ornate ghost pipefish and a whole lot more.
